BEVERLEY CALLARD, 38, who plays long-suffering Liz McDonald in Coronation Street, was brought up in Leeds and now lives in Bolton, Lancashire, with her third husband Steve, who is also her manager. Today she shares her address book secrets...

Porthole Eating House, 3, Ash Street,

Bowness-on-Windermere (015394 42793):

"The wine cellar at this restaurant has bottles that were stored and left during World War Two, so the list is just fantastic. The food is wonderful too, it has a great family atmosphere and it's in a beautiful part of the world. I truly love it."

Schub, 44-46 Market Street, Manchester (0161 834 6521):

"Even though I already have 250 pairs of shoes waiting at home - they're all wrapped in tissues and stored away in boxes in strict colour order - I still can't walk past this fabulous shop without going in. It's my idea of heaven. I'm terrible really, aren't I?"

The Landmark London, 222 Marylebone Road, London NW1 (0171 631 8000):

"I always stay at this hotel whenever I'm in London. It has a great atmosphere, delicious food, top-class service and wonderful staff. My favourite dish here is chicken breast and Caesar salad."

BASTET THE EGYPTIAN CAT

Shown approximately actual size of 51" (130cm) high

The timeless myths and legends of Ancient Egypt inspire a brand new work of art

Ancient Egypt - cradle of civilization. Here, cats were not only loved and cherished as pets, they were also revered as sacred. Bastet, the Egyptian Goddess, was idolised as she was thought to bring wealth and good fortune to all her devoted followers. And today, the characteristic pose of the Egyptian cat can be seen in museums and private collections all over the world.

Introducing Bastet the Egyptian Cat, a stunning new sculpture from the master craftsmen of Brooks & Bentley. Like the ancient Egyptian artefacts that inspired its creation, Bastet is a study in feline grace and dignity. Each outstanding work of art is hand-crafted of fine black porcelain and glazed to a brilliant sheen and strikingly beautiful accents of 22 carat gold elevate this traditional design to new heights. All hand painted to perfection.

Bastet the Egyptian Cat can only be acquired from Brooks & Bentley at the special introductory issue price of just £29.90* per sculpture. To order your sculpture simply return the reservation form by 20th June, 1997 or call 01732 361122 today. You need send no money now.

It's a mentally convoluted week or so as you go through a series of cerebral tests which require you to alter your approach to many familiar things. You must come at the world from an entirely different angle. Half your problems stem from the fact that you have got stuck in an intellectual rut. You need to exercise your brainpower and embrace any kind of change as a welcome break from the routines that have gripped your mind.

TAURUS

APRIL 21 - MAY 21

Your ambitions, finances, travel and your personal world are all surrounded by fantastic vibrations. Too good to be true? Perhaps, but the potential is there within you if you remember that astrology gives you the choice and points out the many chances on offer, but in the end it's up to you to do the rest. There is a lot of luck helping you through the stiffest tests... and you possess the added personal bonus of sparkling charisma!

MAY 22 - JUNE 21

You are at an important crossroads. The Sun's entry into your sign plus the Full Moon in your house of relationships asks you to look closely at not only your own ambitions and interests but how you interact with folk close to you. This is a time of opportunity, but also one when you want to assert your individuality, which is bound to impose a strain on your close partnerships. If a marriage or affair is to survive, you must be allowed to be you.

CANCER

JUNE 22 - JULY 23

The Sagittarian Full Moon isn't really your cup of tea. You want to have roots and security, and the sign of the Centaur is more freedom-loving. This particular lunar placing puts you on edge and makes you just after things you wouldn't usually want. Your health could prove tense and job-stymied as you're not quite sure what you do want. You know instinctively that it's time to break free from many situations causing you stress. Only you can do it.

You're sure of an insecure patch because the Sun and Moon are at odds with your sign. You're at the end of a cycle and must end any unfinished business and start afresh - the sooner the better. Then you will soon put to rest any worries or about this anxious and unsettled time. The more you hang on to any situation which is past it's sell-by date, trying to convince yourself everything's going to be all right, the more damage you will wreak.

SEPT 24 - OCT 23

Your self confidence receives the kind of boost it needs to get your life motivated. It boils down to the Sun's placing in your fellow air sign of Gemini from Wednesday. The next four weeks give you opportunities of so many exciting kinds that you can do no wrong in the favourable period to come. Do don't turn down something on the basis that it went wrong before. This time you are older, wiser and more able to take on a challenge.

★ STARLINE 0891 332 507

The Sun's link to your own eighth house of your solar horoscope turns you in upon yourself. As the sign of sex you are often accused of being too sexy for your shirt! But although you can be obsessed by sex it does not mean you are always turned on by it. Some Scorpios are never really satisfied because their partner cannot meet their passionate needs or falls short in other areas. It's time to sort out what you truly desire in others.

PISCES

FEB 20 - MAR 20

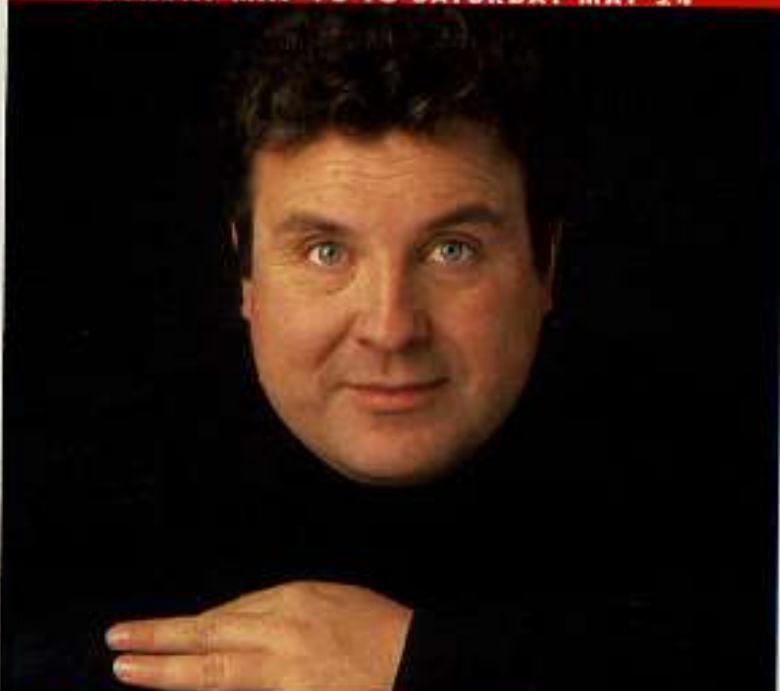

The Sun and Moon close in on you this coming week, leaving you emotionally paralysed. That can create all kinds of paranoid and misgivings which feed inner neuroses and self-doubts. You must not let people or problems get to you while you're in such a fragile state. If you can approach life logically and constructively, instead of this being a negative time it can be the launchpad to help you make the great leap from the old into the new.

'We spend so much time together on tour it's like being married to him!'

DARREN ON PETER

I first met Hartie when I joined Yorkshire in 1989. The club had just won the cup and he was already well established in the team so I suppose I was looking to him for guidance and support, like all the other youngsters. That's how it works at most cricket clubs. I didn't really have that much contact with him until he played a game for the second team while he was recovering from an injury. I'll never forget that game because I was close to my first century when he came out to bat. I had eighty-eight runs... then Hartie came in and got me run out first ball. I was livid but I couldn't say anything because he was a senior, and one thing you learn pretty quickly as a newcomer is that you don't make waves. I wouldn't say I've held it against him... although I didn't score my first hundred until last season. I got my break in the Yorkshire team the following year and before I knew it I was also in the England squad. I was under a lot of pressure because I was only young and I felt people were expecting great things of me at an early age. One minute I was having a knockabout with the second team at Yorkshire and the next I was playing for England alongside players I used to idolise. Having Pete around was useful. He never gave me the elder brother treatment, but he's such an easy bloke to get along with that just being around him was enough to calm me right down. And if I did need any advice he was always there for me. When we play away or if we are on tour I always room with Hartie and we drive to matches together. We spend so much time with each other it's like being married sometimes. We practically live together for six months of the year. He's not a bad room-mate but if you fancy a lie-in then forget it. He's married with two children and he's so used to getting up at the crack of dawn and entertaining the kids that he wakes up really early all the time now. And when Hartie's up everyone has to be up. The first thing you get to know about him is that he's a real joker. If there's a gag or sarcastic comment to be made then he's the one to make it. I'm pretty sure that he's the sock snipper that terrorised our dressing room recently. Someone went round snipping the ends off our socks while we were out playing and then when we stopped wearing socks he moved on to our underpants. He denies it, of course, but that's just his kind of trick. He's always hiding stuff and taking the mickey out of me, but I don't mind. I think he's a pretty good role model for me and if I want to stay at the top in bowling I'm sure he can give me a few tips. I tend to hang around with the senior players more and I'm nowhere near as wild as I used to be. I know I need to take it easy and being in the England squad means I have to be that little bit more careful with what I get up to off the field. I like to think I can follow Hartie's lead there.

AS ENGLAND'S CRICKETERS PREPARE FOR THEIR FIRST ONE-DAY INTERNATIONAL AT HEADINGLEY ON THURSDAY, IAN HYLAND SHARES A ONE-TO-ONE WITH TOP BOWLER DARREN GOUGH, 26, AND HIS GOOD MATE AND FELLOW YORKSHIRE PLAYER PETER HARTLEY, 37. PICTURES BY HOWARD WALKER

‘He was cocky, loud and arrogant . . . but I soon put him in his place’

PETER ON DARREN

When I first met Goughie his Jack the Lad reputation preceded him. He'll admit he was cocky and loud and even a little bit arrogant. But he was obviously a very talented cricketer, although he needed a little fine-tuning.

I didn't really get to know him until he got in the first team because you don't have that much contact with the kids, although I'd obviously heard on the grapevine how well he was doing. He soon became my bowling partner and we were a team, so I'd let him know if he was doing something wrong and he usually took it well. It's difficult for one bowler to tell another what he thinks about his game because so much of it is confidence. That doesn't stop Goughie telling me a few home truths though!

I was as surprised as anyone when Darren broke through into the England team and I was really proud of the way he handled himself. At the time he was being labeled the new Ian Botham and all that nonsense and it was obvious the media were just waiting for him to fail. I never offered him any advice other than to remember where he came from and the responsibility he has. I don't know whether he listened to me or not but I definitely noticed a change in him when he came back from England duty.

He became more confident rather than cocksure and he knew exactly what he wanted and had great strength of character. This year he's even more determined than ever to prove the doubters wrong, and when you're working closely with someone in that frame of mind it tends to rub off, so I'm not complaining.

He has done some daft things in his time but it's the things he says rather than the things he does which are the most amusing. Darren speaks first and thinks later; I always know what he means but I've had to explain him to other people more than once. I love playing tricks on him and I only pull rank in a jokey way. If we've been out fielding all day and a match is obviously going to be a draw I'll always suggest to the coach that Goughie would be the perfect bowler. Then when he's running up I put on my commentator's voice and say "look at this lad Gough; the boy just loves to bowl!" He takes it in good fun, and it keeps him in his place!

I wouldn't say I've taught him everything he knows but one thing he is learning from me (slowly) is how to play golf. I've been playing for years and Darren just said he fancied a game one day and now he's really into it. We often go out on family outings now he's a family man as well. His missus gets on well with mine and when we're on tour they see quite a lot of each other. I'm getting close to the end of my career and I'm not sure whether I'll stay in cricket but I'm pretty sure me and Goughie will stay good mates. We always have a laugh and I have to confess that I miss him when he's away - but don't tell him that or I'll never hear the end of it! ■
